A man may well ask himself: Is this building going to be a monument to my mistakes or a memorial to my judgment?

It'll be the latter if we build it.

HOOTCH-UGGERS POUR INTO JERSEY

N. Y. Saloons Being Tight, Conscientious Drinkers Cross the Hudson.

STRANGERS WELCOME

Pretty Good Stuff Served Freely at Forty and Fifty Cents a Drink.

NEXT SUNDAY ENDS IT

Law Just Passed Even More Drastic Than One in Force Here.

New York's most conscientious drinkers—those fugitives from the effects of the Miller-Hylan-Enright edict, who must have it at any inconvenience—traveled to Jersey City yesterday and found succor from sorrow there. With the lid clamped down tight in Manhattan, or as nearly tight as it ever has been, Jersey beckoned, and the ferryboats and trucks unloaded thousands who thought they had found a way to beat it by the simple process of getting to the other side of the Hudson River.

The exodus began in earnest about 11 o'clock yesterday morning. From then on until closing time or the supply ran out the cafes near or remote from the tube stations and ferryhouses in Jersey were centres of attraction for those whose loyalty to Manhattan institutions runs less than half of 1 per cent. Some stragglers got to Hoboken, Newark and other places, but the chief assault was on Jersey City. The objectives of thirsty Manhattanites were the corner places on Pavonia avenue, Proctor, Henderson, Montgomery, Morgan and the other thoroughfares that skirt or touch the waterfront and don't require too much time or a drive to get to.

In these places, approached and entered by the well known side door, there was to be had "hootch," at forty cents a throw, of a brand that New York gin mill proprietors had no trouble in getting half a dollar or sixty cents for two weeks ago, or before the great drought. Scotch of standard brands—fresh from the ships, it was hinted—could be had for a half dollar, straight or in the more ambitious highball, with ice and spoon. Furthermore, these conscientious drinkers, in the white coat and apron—depending on how far from the river their place was situated—approached and entered them from their dreams. He spoke a word or two in dead phrase. "What's a gonna have—on the house?" he inquired.

"Well, now, this is something like old times," the old Soak began. Then the blow fell.

"You see, next Sunday—that's the only time I see you fellows—well, next Sunday it's all off, see? That was the announcement—bold, definite, emphatic and void of any apology.

"What's the big idea?" This came generally in chorus.

"Well," the white coated gentleman explained, "next Sunday we'll be just like New York. That is, maybe we will. We'll see."

Thus it was brought home to those little groups of serious and conscientious drinkers that the New Jersey Legislature has passed an act that goes into effect next Saturday at midnight and which is designed to do for Jersey City, Hoboken, Newark and elsewhere in Jersey just what Gov. Miller and the New York Legislature, aided and abetted by Commissioner Enright, have done for New York. That much, and even worse.

No Jury Trials "Over There."

In New York State the incorrigible ones cling hopefully to the relief seen in the provision of the law that guarantees a jury trial for violators. They need of court cases piling up and like to contemplate the time it will take to get a jury to convict. But here is the provision of the New Jersey act.

"Every prosecutor, sheriff, constable, police officer and other peace officer is required to use all due diligence to detect violations of the act."

"The Prosecutor of the Peace, in each county, and his Assistant Prosecutor are authorized to prosecute in the name of the State of New Jersey all violators of the act, and all trials will be brought before a judge of the Court of Common Pleas by the Prosecutor, in a summary manner, without indictment; the judge sitting as a magistrate, without a jury."

"The penalty following conviction will be a sentence to jail for a period not to exceed six months, or a fine not to exceed $500, or both, in the discretion of the magistrate."

"Any officer, with or without warrant or a process of law, is required upon view to arrest any person violating the provisions of the act, and to seize any liquor or any chattel used in such act of violation."

And as if that wasn't enough to either the souls of the little group of serious drinkers New Jersey came through yesterday with the story of the meanest prohibition enforcement agent Uncle Sam has sent out to seize a drinker on Saturday in a saloon in Water street, Hoboken.

Bit the Hand That Gave 'Hootch.

A decent appearing sort of chap entered the place and bought a cigar. "Was in the place a block down," he confided to the proprietor, who was appearing him to be an old stranger nowadays, "and two Federal men came in. They're there now and I think are working this way. If you've got anything, I'd suggest you get it out of sight."

The proprietor thanked his informant for the tip, and gathered up an odd bottle or two of "hootch" and stowed it away in a safe place. He had no sooner done this when two men entered, flashed their badges and made a search. When they found nothing prohibited by Mr. Volstead they congratulated the conscientious saloon man on his observance of the law. "Keep it up, that's our advice to you," they said as they made their exit.

"Well, I guess I was right, eh?" remarked the decent looking stranger. "That ought to be worth a drink."

"It sure was. The best in the house, what'll it be?" asked the boss, reaching for the flask reposing in his posterior pocket.

The stranger tossed a drink off, with evident relief, then flashed his own badge, remarking: "Sorry, but I guess I'll have to take you along. Be more careful next time."

VICTIMS OF HOOTCH RAIDERS TAKE REVENGE ON 'DOUBLE'

Solomon's Resemblance to Cop Ends, However, When Four Dry Huskies Batter Him With Blackjacks and Send Him to Hospital.

Solomon Davis of 191 West 133d street discovered yesterday morning that he resembled a detective of the Fourth Inspection district. He said he gained this knowledge after he had been seized by four men when on his way home early in the morning and had heard the cries which they uttered as they began battering him with blackjacks.

"One of them yelled that he'd got the squealer," said Davis, "and then they all jumped on me. I got an awful crack on the side of the head, and the bird who hit me said he'd fix me so I wouldn't tip off another booze joint. He hit me a couple of times, and the third chap drew a razor and called me a stool pigeon. About that time a ton of brick fell on my head—or something that felt like it—and the next I remembered was when I woke up in the hospital."

Seventeen stitches were taken in Davis' scalp, and toward noon, when he felt better, he gave Detective Winterhalter of the West 135th street station a description of the men who attacked him. The police were looking for the other alleged members of the gang. Several policemen said Davis resembled a detective who had been raiding saloons.

to buy a drink in one of his old haunts, with the result that the cops and plain clothes men, although busy on the dry issue, made few arrests.

"The police and other officers are doing just the thing now to wipe the dry laws off the statute books," commented Magistrate Marsh in Morrisania Court after hearing eleven cases yesterday. "Such extreme cases make the law odious and that is the surest way to bring about an amendment to the Eighteenth Amendment."

STATE POLICE TO RAID RURAL REGION SALOONS

Can Invade Second and Third Cities by New Orders.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.

New York Herald Bureau, Albany, April 24.

Major George F. Chandler, in orders to his State Troopers, told them that they must make a drive against saloons selling liquor. While their duties are confined to the rural sections, he said they would be empowered to go after the saloons in third, and even second class cities. The orders said:

"Whenever you are reasonably sure that liquor is being sold, whether you have a warrant or not, get after the persons operating such a saloon unlawfully, and do this with a strong arm. If anything is sold over the bar seize it and put the men under arrest. We must use common sense, however. We have no authority of search and seizure under the law. Whenever a search warrant can be obtained get it and execute at once."

$9,000 LIQUOR SEIZED IN RAID NEAR BORDER

MALONE, N. Y., April 24.—Three men and a woman, all living Rochester as their homes, were arrested by Federal prohibition agents in a raid on automobiles alleged to be engaged in bootlegging operations at Bombay, near the Canadian border, early to-day. Two automobiles, said by the enforcement of officials to contain 976 quarts of liquor, valued at $9,000, were seized.

Those arrested were Maurice Bloom, Albert McNeale, David Bravaman and Miss Margaret Boland. They will be arraigned before United States Commissioner Lawrence here to-morrow.

There were five cars in the line that the Federal agents held up. Three of these escaped across the Canadian border.

Following the suggestion of Judges of General Sessions, Magistrates held offenders charged with violating the Mul-Lin-Gage dry laws in $1,000 each. Eighteen men have been fined in summa ranging from $300 to $1,000. Persons indicted for liquor offences are being held in $1,000 bail in the Court of General Sessions.
